GENERAL INTRODUCTION

THE system of dating a document in common vogue for three or four centuries after the reign of Richard I.[1] continually reminded men of their duty to the Catholic Church and the English State, for it was regulated by the Kalendars of both.

Let us consider two examples selected at random:[2]

1. Datum apud Whalleye die Veneris proximo post festum translationis sancti Thome archiepiscopi et martyris anno regni regis Edwardi tertij post conquestum decimo.

This date contains three elements: (a) The place at which the document was executed—Whalley ; (b) the day on which it was executed—the Friday next after the Feast of the Translation of S. Thomas the archbishop and martyr ; (c) the year in which it was executed—the tenth year of the reign of King Edward the Third after the Conquest. Passing over the date of place, we see that in order to write the date of time in our modern manner we require to know three things—viz., how the years of Edward III.'s reign were reckoned, when the Feast of the Translation of S. Thomas the archbishop and martyr was held every year, and on what day of the month in that particular year was the Friday after that Feast.

[1] Saints' Days came into common use for dating from about 1230 onwards.

[2] Whalley Abbey Coucher Book, Vol. IV., pp. 1004, 1005.

2. Datum apud Whalleye in vigilia Pentecostes anno regni regis Edwardi tertij a conquestu xvj°.

This date contains the same three elements of place, day, and year as the preceding example. But there is this difference, that the day, the Vigil of Pentecost, depends upon a feast which we know may fall upon one of thirty-five different days according to the variable date of Easter. Before we can assign the date of day and month in this case, we must have means of ascertaining the dates each year of those Church festivals which were movable because regulated by Easter.

Altogether, therefore, we need to be able to find out at a glance:

1. Regnal Years, changing every reign.
2. Easter Days and Week-days, varying year by year.
3. Saints' Days and other fixed Holy Days of the Christian Year.

It is the purpose of these three books to provide the English historical student with this necessary material for his work. With their aid let us elucidate the two examples given above.

1. In the book of Regnal Years we see that the tenth year of Edward III. began on 25 Jan. 1335-6, and that the date of Easter in that year, which was a leap year, was 31 Mar. 1336. From the alphabetical list of Saints' Days we learn that the Feast of the Translation of S. Thomas the archbishop and martyr was held annually on 7 July. Turn now to the book of Easter Tables and find the Table for 31 Mar., Secundum F. In the list of years at the top check the presence of 1336*. Find 7 July : it was a Sunday: and look on in July till you come to the Friday after : it was the twelfth. The former date given as an example will therefore be written shortly as Whalley, Friday, 12 Jul. 1336.[1]

2. The tables of Regnal Years show that 16 Edw. III. began 25 Jan. 1341-2, and that Easter fell on 31 Mar. 1342. In the Easter Tables we find that the Feast of Pentecost was on 19 May, 1342. The Vigil, therefore, was on the day before, the eighteenth. The second date is therefore written in the modern way as Whalley, Saturday, 18 May, 1342.

It is hoped that the publication of these tables and lists in three separate volumes may be a convenience to those who require to use them concurrently. The student can have them all open on his desk at once, and turn from one to another without losing his place.

[1] Note that no month requires more than the first three letters of its name to distinguish it from the rest.

INTRODUCTION TO THIS VOLUME

THE contents of this volume sufficiently explain its purpose, which is, to enable the student to ascertain without calculation the beginning of any regnal year of any English post-Conquestum monarch, the date of the Easter or Easters which fell within any such year, the diplomatic title of any sovereign since 1066, and the holder at any time of any of the eight titles of nobility which were (some still are) closely connected with the crown of England. The lists of sovereigns of Scotland and of France, and of the ducal years of Lancaster, etc., are given to save trouble and search elsewhere. For the period before the Conquest it has been thought sufficient to give the Easter Dates, the Indictions, and the following brief notes on the dating of Old English diplomas.

I.—THE DATING OF OLD ENGLISH DIPLOMAS

Owing to the fact that before the eleventh century the Kings of England and of the smaller English kingdoms had no chancery officials, and consequently no definite formulæ for their grants (except a few Beneventan phrases[1]), no two diplomas are exactly alike. We can, however, trace no fewer than eight elements in the composition of the date of place and time.

1. The Year of Grace.—Until the reign of Henry II. the year of the Incarnation of our Lord was reckoned in England and Ireland from 25 Dec. to the 24 Dec. following. This system, known as the Recapitulatio Dionysii, because devised by Dionysius, a Roman abbot, consisted of a cycle of nineteen years (beginning in 532[1]) by which the date of Easter should be determined. The years were reckoned to begin on 25 Dec. It was used in England, and in England only, from the time of S. Wilfrid, having been brought from Italy by him or Benedict Biscop, whose pupil, Bede, established its use by his writings and teaching; and at the Council of Chelsea (27 Jul. 816) it was ordered to be used in dating episcopal acts.[2] According to this reckoning, William the Conqueror was crowned on the first day of 1067. The year of Grace and the Indiction were the normal dates of time in these diplomas.

2. The Indiction.—The most stable element in European dating was the system known as the Indiction, marking the place of any given year in a cycle of fifteen years. The first year in the cycle is known as the first Indiction, the last as the fifteenth Indiction. The cycle repeats itself every fifteen years; thus, for instance, in the eighth century all the following years

[1] Though Easter Day, 533 (the first in the new Recapitulation), fell on 27 Mar., this does not account for the ancient Church Kalendar entry, 27 March, Resurrectio Prima. See Vol. III.

[2] This order is still observed. See § 4, The Episcopal Year.

were of the first Indiction, 703, 718, 733, 748, 763, 778, 793. The origin of the cycle is not quite clear. There was in Egypt a system of enrolment-by-household which began in the reign of Augustus (whose years were reckoned, in Egypt only, from 29 August, the anniversary of the taking of Alexandria). Besides a census of persons and property the returns showed when each male became of age to pay the poll-tax: and it was this age (14 years) which settled the period of the cycle at 14 years—i.e., the second time your name appeared in the enrolment you had to pay the tax. Augustus began his reign officially and as a Principate 27 Jun. B.C. 23, and the enrolments-by-household were taken for B.C. 9, A.D. 6, 20, 34, 48, 62, 76, 90, 104, etc.,[1] the year beginning 29 August. But the cycle with which we are concerned is one of 15, not 14, years. It can be shown that our fifteen-year Indictional cycle began in Egypt in A.D. 297,[2] and is reckoned from 1 Sep. For many centuries it was supposed that the Indiction began in 312. But whatever obscurity surrounds the time and purpose of its origin, the important point to remember is that the year A.D. 313 (i.e., 1 Sep. 312 to 31 Aug. 313) was the first Indiction; 314, the second; 315, the third, etc. When the year of Grace was employed for chronological purposes, from the latter part of the seventh century, it became necessary to reconcile the two systems, and it is probable that Bede threw back his Annus Domini to the preceding September.[1] But very soon it became the rule to treat the Indiction as belonging to the year of which it included eight months. The Bedan Indiction (which was also adopted by the Empire, Indictio Bedana or Cæsarea), began on 24 Sep. Thus a diploma of any given year would have a different Indiction according as it was executed before or after September. This proved very inconvenient, and so before long the beginning of the Indiction was transferred to Christmas, so as to coincide with that of the Annus Domini. The following rule will find the Indiction of any given year. Add three to the year of Grace, and divide by fifteen. The remainder gives the Indiction; if there be no remainder, the Indiction is 15.[2]

3. The Regnal Year.—The Regnal Year was not extensively used in Old English diplomas. It was probably employed in imitation of the Merovingian Kings of the Franks, who (themselves copying the Roman Emperors of the first century) reckoned their regnal years from the date of their accession to any part of the kingdom. It was used by Æthilbert of

[1] See Dr. R. L. Poole, Medieval Reckonings of Time, in this series; and his paper on the "Chronology of Bede," Journal of Theological Studies, October, 1918.

[2] E.g. (a) To find the Indiction for 1920. $1920 + 3 = 1923$. $\frac{1923}{15} = 128\frac{3}{15}$. The Indiction for 1920 is 3.

(b) To verify the date Actum est anno dominice incāti DCCCXXII. indictī .xv. (Earle, Land Charters, p. 101.) $822 + 3 = 825$. $\frac{825}{15} = 55$. The Indiction for 822 was 15, and the date is correctly given.

Kent, 732; Æthilbald of Mercia, 734, 742, 749; Offa of Mercia, 794; Coenuulf of Mercia, 811, 812, 814; Uuiglaf of Mercia, 836; Athelstan (925-940); Eâdwig (955-959).[1] It seems to have found more favour in Mercia than elsewhere. Its secular character, and the number and comparative instability of the Kings, were perhaps the reasons why it did not obtain a firmer hold. When, centuries later, there was but one King, who came to the throne by hereditary succession, and dated his reign not from his accession but from the solemnity of his coronation by the Archbishop of Canterbury, the regnal year established itself so strongly that it remains in royal diplomas to this day on an equal footing with the year of Grace.

4. The Episcopal Year.—The bishop's years are reckoned from the day of his consecration, or (in the then uncommon event of his going to another See) of his translation. It is an unusual feature of Old English diplomas, but is found in 811 and 812, in charters of Coenuulf of Mercia, combined with the year of the Incarnation, the Indiction, and the King (e.g., praesulatus hautem Wulfredi arcepis anno .vi.). In one of his own charters, in 813, Wulfred uses it together with the year of Grace and the Indiction, but omitting the regnal date.[2] English bishops still use their episcopal year of consecration, or translation, in conjunction with the year of Grace, and without the regnal year (e.g., "Given under our hand and Episcopal seal this Third day of January in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and eighteen and of Our Translation the fifteenth.").

The gap between 836 and 925 is partially closed by charters of Æthelred, Ealdorman of Mercia, 896, and Werfrith, Bishop of Worcester, 904; Earle, op. cit., pp. 154, 161.

5 AND 6. THE DAY OF THE MONTH AND OF THE WEEK. —The day of the month is usually reckoned according to the Roman Kalendar of Kalends, Nones, and Ides. Examples, however, are found of the style now in use (which was invented by Gregory the Great, but strangely discarded), of counting the days from the first of the month (e.g., tertia decima die mensis iunii quod ÷ īd iunii, 704).[1] The day of the month is not found frequently, but is commoner than the day of the week, which is but rarely inserted. The day of the week is reckoned in the ecclesiastical manner (e.g., die .iiii. feria—i.e., Wednesday).[2]

7. THE DATE OF PLACE.—The date of place is not a common feature. If transcripts are reliable it may be traced back to the middle of the ninth century, but it is not found in originals until the reign of Athelstan (e.g., in uilla omnib: notissima· que leowtun. nuncupatur).[3]

8. THE WITNESSES.—The list of witnesses, headed by the name of the King, is the one element invariably present in the authentication of Old English diplomas. Dates of time and place may be omitted, but the witnessing, even if it did not imply presence at an actual ceremony of transference of some such piece of the property as a sod or a turf, was of such value in giving publicity and therefore stability to the grant that it was never in any circumstances left out. The name of each witness is preceded by a cross. What part the signatories took other than that of authenticating the deed is not very clear. But it seems probable that during the ninth century and the first quarter of the tenth, they were consulted (as composing the Witan) and authorized the gift, but that before about 800 and after about 925 they signed merely as witnesses.[1] The phrases employed vary considerably, but a normal form is: his testibus consentientibus atque confirmantibus quorum nomina infra nota sunt. A normal signature is + Ego Uulfred archiepiscopus consensi et subscripsi. The crosses were made and the signatures written by the scribe who drew up the diploma. No Old English diploma bears a seal.[2] Frankish diplomas have seals, and often no witnesses.

II.—(a) 1066-1189

The Old English diploma lasted on after the Conquest until the middle of the twelfth century. The date of time, however, disappears after 1066; the date of place (e.g., apud Merletgam) is not always inserted; and the seal appears as a conspicuous feature, attached en placard, pendant, or on a strip cut horizontally along the bottom of the diploma almost up to the left-hand border. The names of the witnesses are preceded by t., T., Test., or Test, and sometimes in Henry I.'s reign by the signum crucis, +.

[1] See Maitland, Domesday and Beyond, pp. 247–250.

[2] Edward the Confessor had a seal, but never used it for diplomas.

(b) 1189 ONWARDS

The extraordinary improvements in diplomatic style and precision which marked the reign of Richard I. were probably due to Hubert Walter, Bishop of Salisbury 1189, Archbishop of Canterbury 1193-1205, Justiciar of England 1194-1198, and Chancellor 1199-1205. In this reign appear, clearly distinguished for the first time, Letters Patent and Letters Close, signed Teste me ipso (by the King), and Royal Charters, signed Hiis testibus. The date of time reappears alongside the date of place[1] (e.g., Data p manum E. Elyen Epī Cancell nri Apd Bellum Castrum de Rupe Andel .xv. die Junii. Anno regni nostī nono[2]). The date of time consists of the month and the day of the month (reckoned from the first day, as in isolated Old English diplomas): the regnal year[3] (reckoned until 1272 from the King's coronation[4]) is, however, often added, as [1] After the reign of Henry III., the royal chancery, which had hitherto accompanied the King in his itinerary, remained stationary at Westminster. The date of place is thereafter apud Westmonasterium.

[2] Round, Ancient Charters, p. 109.

[3] See the following tables for details connected with some of the Kings.

[4] It was ordered in the pontificals and coronation services that the coronation should take place on a Sunday or some solemn feast. Et praevideatur semper quod coronatio tam regis is also sometimes the year of Grace, which, according to the mos Anglicanus, began on Lady Day, 25 March,[1] instead of 25 December.

[1] Richard I was crowned twice: (1) Sunday, 3 Sep. 1189; (2) on his return from captivity in Austria, Sunday, 17 Apr. 1194. His Regnal Years, however, are reckoned from his first Coronation only.

[2] John's Regnal Years are of irregular length, as they begin on Ascension Day and end on the Eve of the Ascension Day next following. Both days are given, with the Easter Day in between.

[1] Edward IV made no alteration in the reckoning of his Regnal Years on account of the restoration of Henry VI, 9 Oct. 1470–14 Apr. 1471.

[2] By reckoning his reign from the day before the Battle of Bosworth, Henry VII made Richard and his supporters to be guilty of treason in the eye of the law, and cleared his own followers of the same accusation.

[1] In 1752 the New Style was adopted in all the British Dominions. The day after Wed. 2 Sep. 1752 was Thurs. 14 Sep. 1752. New Style Easter came in in 1753. The year 26 Geo. II. ended 21 Jun. 1753, and his subsequent years were reckoned from 22 Jun. From 1752 onwards the year begins on 1 Jan. instead of 25 Mar. (this had been the usage in Scotland since 1 Jan. 1600). See 24 Geo. II, 1751, c. 23.

THE GREGORIAN REFORM OF THE KALENDAR

By his Bull, Inter Gravissimas, 24 Feb. 1581/2, Pope Gregory XIII. provided for the correction of the Kalendar by directing (1) that the date of the spring equinox should be moved from 11 Mar. to 21 Mar., the day fixed in 325 at the Council of Nicæa, by omitting the days between 4 and 15 Oct. 1582 (i.e., the day after Thursday 4 Oct. was Monday, 15 Oct. 1582); and (2) that in order to correct the cumulative error involved in the system of an intercalated day every fourth year, no year marking the close of a century should be a Leap Year unless divisible without remainder by 400 (i.e., 1600 and 2000 are Leap Years, but 1700, 1800, 1900, 2100 are not). There still remains an error of less than half a minute a year, which will have to be corrected when it has thrown the Kalendar a day out. In Mar. 1584/5 a Bill to extend the alteration to England was read twice in the House of Lords: but got no farther.

II. DIPLOMATIC TITLES OF ENGLISH SOVEREIGNS

THESE titles are those used in official documents—e.g., charters and writs—and are not the titles found on coins or seals. The nucleus of the title, Dei gratia Rex, has remained unchanged for over eleven hundred years. The titles of Old English Kings are selected only in order to show the lineage of the post-Conquest regnal title.

I. SOME OLD ENGLISH TITLES

[1] Matilda was styled Anglorum Domina after her election 7–8 Apr., 1141. Dominus, or Domina, was the correct style of a deceased sovereign's recognized successor before coronation. See the titles of Richard I. and John.

[2] The continual assertion of the titles of Normandy, Aquitaine, and Anjou was necessary, because (1) they carried status and office in France—e.g., the Count of Anjou was hereditary seneschal of France, and (2) they did not naturally, or, indeed, often, cohere in one person. See the Hand-lists, farther on. For Henry II.'s use of the phrase Dei gratia, see Dr. R. L. Poole's note in E. H. R., January, 1908, p. 79.

[3] Richard I. (a) The Grace now becomes normal. (b) Though Rex Anglorum is still the correct style, Rex Anglie is sometimes found. (c) The Regnal date appears henceforth regularly.

Angł 7 Dux Norm̄ 7 Aqit̄ 7 Com̄ And. [=Ricardus Dei gratia dominus Anglorum et Dux Normannorum et Aquitannorum et Comes Andegavorum].

[1] John. (a) Anglie, Normannie, Aquitannie, Andegavie now become the normal forms. (b) There are never less than one nor more than two *et*s in this title, though they may occur in three places: N. Dei gratia Rex Anglie Dominus Hibernie (3) et Dux Normannie (1) et Aquitannie (1) (2) et Comes Andegavie: if there is one et, it is generally placed between Normannie and Aquitannie, but sometimes between Aquitannie and Comes. (c) Hibernie is sometimes spelt Hybernie. John was created King (but styled only Dominus) of Ireland May, 1177; Earl of Mortain July, 1189; Earl of Cornwall late in 1189.

2. [Oct. 1259-1272] Henricus Dei gratia Rex Anglie Dominus Hibernie et Dux Aquitannie.

GEORGE V.

1. George by the grace of God[1] of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and of the British Dominions beyond the Seas King, Defender of the Faith, Emperor of India, etc., etc., etc.[2]

[1] Gratia Dei appears to have been first used in an imperial diplomatic title by Charlemagne, 768–814. The phrase was used only by anointed monarchs. Nullus potest proprie uti isto verbo Dei Gratia, qui in laicali positus est dignitate, nisi sit imperator vel rex vel alter qui sui capitis recepit unctionem. Nam tales unguntur oleo sancto. (Petrus de Boateriis, cited by Selden, Titles of Honour, p. 92, apud Maskell, op. cit., Vol. III., p. xiii.) By the old Provinciale Romanum the Emperor and the Kings of England, Jerusalem, France, and Sicily were alone entitled to unction as well as consecration. For two years the four latter titles cohered in Philip and Mary. Of the five but one remains.

[2] The meaning of the triple etc. is not clear, but some gradation of compliment is probably intended. The Sovereign's Style is thrice proclaimed, in Latin, French, and English, during the Coronation Banquet.

[1] In 1204 Philip II of France conquered and confiscated Normandy, which was finally united to the French Crown by Louis XI in 1469. But persons representing the Dukes of Normandy and Aquitaine attended English Coronations so long as Francie formed part of the Royal Style. The Dukes of Normandy were crowned by the Archbishop of Rouen in his Cathedral.

[1] In August 1204 Philip II of France conquered Anjou. In 1259 by the Treaty of Paris Henry III formally ceded Normandy, Anjou, Touraine, Maine, and Poitou to Louis IX. All north of the Loire was reconquered by Henry V, but was finally ceded to Charles VII by Henry VI. Anjou was finally united to the French Crown in 1480, and Maine in 1481.

[2] Styled Dux Cornubie et Comes Cestrie. This was the first time that a dukedom had been created in England. The duchy of Cornwall was confined to the King's eldest son.

[2] See p. 75 for the Ducal years of Dukes Henry and John.

[3] Since Henry IV had a better title to the Duchy than to the Crown he kept them separate and arranged that the ducal succession should be governed by the ducal charters. Edward IV, on the contrary, had the c own by right, and the duchy by forfeiture. He therefore re-erected the merged duchy and arranged that, though still separate, it should belong to him and his heirs, Kings of England, perpetually, and be a county Palatine. The same arrangement was made by Henry VII, who, by dating his reign from the day before the battle of Bosworth, made Richard III a legal traitor whose possessions were forfeit to the Crown

[1] Regnal Years of Scottish Kings were reckoned from their accession (certainly, from the reign of David I, and, presumably, before him), not their coronation, which was of less importance than in England. Their usual title was Dei gratia Rex Scottorum. The acts of the English Governors were dated with the year of our Lord et gubernationis nostre anno [primo], without reference to the captive King.

[2] David II was a prisoner in England 1346–1357.

[3] James I was a prisoner in England 1406–1424.

(c) THE ENGLISH EXCHEQUER YEAR

In making up the annual accounts of national receipts and expenditure the English Exchequer ended the financial year, without regard to the current Regnal Year, at Michaelmas, 29 September. It was a fixed feast of great convenience, not involved in such lengthy observances as Christmas and Easter, falling after the harvest, and while the roads to London were still hard enough for travelling. Down to the time of Edward II the first Exchequer Year of any King ran up to the first Michaelmas of his reign. But from Edward II's reign onwards the king's first Exchequer Year was reckoned from the Michaelmas nearest to his accession.

In 1786[1] a change began with the introduction of a Supplementary Statement of Accounts up to 5 January (Old Christmas Day). In 1799–1800 the 5th of January was formally adopted as the end of the financial year. In 1832 the end of the year for the Budget was 5 April (Old Lady Day), though Supply was taken only up to 31 March In 1854, by 17 and 18 Vic., c. 94, s. 2, the beginning of the national financial year was fixed at 1 April.

(d) ENGLISH LAW AND UNIVERSITY TERMS AND QUARTER DAYS

LAW TERMS

The English Law Terms were regulated by the succession of the seasons and by the Christian Year. Christmas and Michaelmas, fixed Festivals, were followed by fixed Terms. Easter and Trinity Terms, being regulated by the Festivals the names of which they bear, might move over a space of thirty-five days. A Term might fall in two Regnal Years. For example, in the reign of Edward I Michaelmas Term bore the date of the Regnal Year in which it began, and of the next Regnal Year, in which it ended. The periods between the Terms are called Vacations—e.g., the Long Vacation is the time from the end of Trinity Term to the beginning of Michaelmas Term.

To find the days and dates on which the Terms of any year began and ended, look for the date of Easter Day in the list of Regnal Years, and then find the corresponding table in the volume of Easter Tables.

I. Before 1831

Michaelmas Term.

Began (before 1641) 9 Oct. (or 10 Oct., if 9 Oct. was Sunday).
(1641–1751)[1] 23 Oct. (or 24 Oct., if 23 Oct. was Sunday).
(1752–1830)[2] the Fourth Day of the Morrow of All Souls—i.e., 6 Nov. (or 7 Nov., if 6 Nov. was Sunday).
Ended 28 Nov. (or 29 Nov., if 28 Nov. was Sunday).

Hilary Term.

Began 23 Jan. (or 24 Jan., if 23 Jan. was Sunday).
Ended 12 Feb. (or 13 Feb., if 12 Feb. was Sunday).

Easter Term.

Began Wednesday fortnight after Easter Day—i.e., Wednesday after the Second Sunday after Easter.
Ended Monday after Ascension Day.

Trinity Term.

Began (before 1264) Wednesday after the Octave of Trinity Sunday.
(1264–1540) Wednesday after Corpus Christi Day (the same day as before, but with another title).
(1541–1830)[3] Friday after Corpus Christi Day.
Ended Wednesday fortnight after it began—i.e., Wednesday after the Third Sunday after Trinity.

QUARTER DAYS

The Quarter Days generally observed for settling accounts are:

The Annunciation of Our Lady, 25 Mar.
The Nativity of S. John the Baptist, 24 Jun.
The Feast of S. Michael and All Angels, 29 Sep.
Christmas Day, 25 Dec.

In some cases the Old Quarter Days were observed after 1752—e.g., 5 Apr. (Old Lady Day).

In the North of England the Quarter Days were: Candlemas, 2 Feb.; Whitsun; Lammas, 1 Aug.; S. Martin in Hieme, 11 Nov.

V. ENGLISH ROYAL CHARTERS AND WRITS ANALYZED

THE documents analyzed in this section belong, strictly speaking, to two classes: (1) Diplomas or "charters"; (2) Writs. (1) A diploma is a document which either (a) effects a change (e.g., of ownership in land, or of grade in nobility); or (b) is the written record of a change otherwise carried out (e.g., by delivery of a sod of earth) given by the person effecting the change to the person for whose benefit it is effected. (2) A writ is an order to do something, or to take note that something has been done.[1] The one is a title-deed which may be produced in a law-court as proof of ownership, etc.; the other is a letter setting administrative machinery in motion which may be produced as sufficient authority for the action which it enjoins. Both classes of document must bear clear evidence who they are from, who they are to, what is their purpose, and whether they are adequately ratified. As medieval government was carried on by writs, and the possession of real property depended on charters, it was necessary to have such forms as might readily be recognized as authentic by those who issued, received, or were affected by them. "For the writing which is written in the King's name, and sealed with the King's ring, may no man reverse."

[1] Cf. for (1*a*) a Bishop's Deed of Institution to a benefice; for (1*b*) a Priest's Letters of Orders; for (2) a Bishop's Mandate to his Archdeacon to induct to a benefice.

Constant repetition, the spirit of orderliness, the disappearance of original deeds, and the cunning of the forger, tended to bring into existence in each of the royal Chanceries of Europe set formulas for their diplomas and writs.[1] As, moreover, all Governments have similar work to do, and as that work was carried out in medieval times by men who were banded together in a great international organization which had a common language, it is not surprising to find a family likeness in the diplomas and writs of the several Christian nations of the West.

A diploma, like a sermon, should have three parts—a beginning, a middle, and an end. Of these, the first and last are likely to become stereotyped, and the middle to remain unset except for a framework of key-phrases varying according to the business in hand. It must not be thought that all the parts named in the following analysis of a pattern diploma will be found in every document, or that the order in which they occur is invariable.

Analysis of the Diploma-Form

I. The Protocol:

(a) Invocation.

(b) Proëm—giving general motives.

[1] For further details regarding English diplomas and writs, consult H. Hall, Studies in English Official Historical Documents and A Formula Book of English Official Historical Documents, Part I. Diplomatic Documents, both Cambridge, 1908.

ERRATUM

Page 89, III. (q), for "Appreciation" read "Apprecation."

(c) Superscription—giving grantor's name and title.
(d) Address—names, etc., of those to whom it is directed.
(e) Salutation.

II. The Text :
(f) Notification.
(g) Preamble—giving particular reasons.
(h) Disposition—giving details, conditions, etc., of grant.
(i) Injunction.
(k) Prohibition.
(l) Sanction—giving penalties for infraction.
(m) Valediction.

III. The Ratification :
(n) Date of place.
(o) Date of time.
(p) Attestation—names or seals of witnesses.
(q) Appreciation.
(r) Completion—scribe's name and note of despatch.
(s) Seal of grantor (not universal or early).

The analysis of the Writ-form would be, mutatis mutandis, very similar to that of the Diploma-form, but briefer and a little less formal, as being intended only for some temporary administrative purpose.

Old English Royal Diploma

This royal Charter or Land-boc cannot be very closely analyzed in form or wording. The King speaks in the first person singular; the grantee is mentioned either in the second person (chiefly in Kent until c. 800), or the third person (e.g., in Mercia and Essex). The tense of the grant is at first present or past, and later present, past, or future mixed with present. The Charter is never in epistolary form; never has any Address (generally omits also any Salutation and Notification); never contains a specific grant of jurisdiction; never threatens a monetary sanction; never mentions the scribe's name; has no Completion, and no seal. The Land-boc was current from the seventh to the twelfth centuries, and was used to convey land.

I. The Protocol :

(a) Invocation: ✠ In nomine dei nostri saluatoris ihu xpi, or similarly; or, ✠ Regnante in perpetuum domino nostro Iesu Christo saluatore ! or similarly.

(b) Proëm: some sentiment regarding the proper use of temporal things, etc.

(c) Superscription: Quapropter, Quamobrem, Qua de re, Unde ego (name and title at length).

II. The Text :

(g) Preamble: particular motive; either spiritual —e.g., pro remedio animae meae : or material —e.g., pro eius amabili pecunia.

(h) Disposition: statement of grant (concedo, condono, dono, trado, tribuo); note of conditions, consideration, or reservation; description of the property (perambulation often in English).

(l) Sanction: spiritual penalties: Si quis . . . Quisquis uero, autem. . . .

III. The Ratification :

(n), (o), (p) See pp. 13–19. Acta, gesta, etc., never Datum. Attestation: ✠ Names of King and witnesses; consensi et subscripsi, etc.

Old English Royal Vernacular Writ

This Writ, though a kind of very formal and official letter, modelled perhaps upon the letters in Acts xv. 23–29; xxiii. 26–30,[1] was yet free and simple in phraseology and structure. After the Notification it may vary infinitely. It was used for administrative purposes, proclamations, notifications, etc. The earliest known example occurs in 984; it became common under Cnut, and was in use until the reign of Richard I. It was the forerunner of the Anglo-Norman Royal Writ-Charter.

I. The Protocol :

(a) Invocation: ✠

(c) Superscription: N. cyncg or Ic N. cyncg.

(d) Address: (1) The administrative officers and constituent members of the Shire Court—i.e., the bishops, earls, reeves, and thegns; or (2) particular persons by name.

(e) Salutation: gret N. freondlice.

II. The Text :

(k) Prohibition: and ic nelle . . . or and ic wylle nan . . . or and ic forbeode . . .

(l) Sanction: and gif anig man . . .

(m) Valediction: God eow alle gehealde.

III. The Ratification :

(n), (o) Date of place and time rare, singly or together.

(p) Attestation: rare; witnesses only mentioned—e.g., on Eadgiðe gewitnysse ðaere cwene and Godwines eorles and Haroldes eorles.

Anglo-Norman Royal Writ-Charter

This charter is the Anglo-Norman adaptation of the old vernacular Writ. The Address varies; there is no Proëm; no Sanction; no complete Date; witnesses gradually oust the Valediction; the Preamble is not always present. This form was used for conveying land, etc., and persisted until Henry II.'s reign.

I. The Protocol :

(c) Superscription: N. Rex Anglorum.

(d) Address: (1) The administrative officers and lieges of a shire—e.g., Thome eboracensi Archiepiscopo et Samsoni episcopo et Omnibus Baronibus et fidelibus suis francis et Anglis de Gloecestra scira ; or (2) universal—e.g., Archiepiscopis Episcopis Abbatibus (Justiciis, inserted by Stephen) Comitibus Vicecomitibus (Baronibus, inserted later by Henry I.) (Ministris, inserted by Stephen) et Omnibus fidelibus suis francis et Anglis totius Anglie.

(e) Salutation: Salutem.

II. The Text :

Anglo-Norman Royal Writ

This Writ was used for administrative and judicial purposes during the twelfth century. Towards the end of the century the Superscription and Address were expanded, in the Injunction Mando became Mandamus, the witness of the King (Teste me ipso) superseded that of his magnates in the Attestation, and the day of the month was added in the Date.

I. The Protocol :

(c) Superscription: N. Rex Anglorum.

(d) Address: (1) Particular and general (as in charters)—e.g., N.N. et baronibus suis et fidelibus francis et anglis; (2) to particular administrative officials—e.g., N. thesaurario et illi et illi camerariis.

(e) Salutation: Salutem.

II. The Text :

(f) Notification: Sciatis quod . . . (omitted when inappropriate).

(i) Injunction: Mando, precipio, volo . . . Liberate, computate, allocate. . . . Vide sicut teipsum et omnia tua diligis quod sis ad scaccarium. . . .

(k) Prohibition: Prohibeo, nolo . . .

III. The Ratification :

(p) Attestation: Testibus . . . (few witnesses, often one or two).

(n) Date of place: Apud . . .

(s) The King's Great Seal on strip.

Anglo-Angevin Royal Charter

This form was used with small variations by Henry II. Notice the developement of the Protocol, the introduction of Tenendam in the Disposition, and the continued absence of the date of time.

I. The Protocol :

(c) Superscription: N. and title at length (see p. 53).

(d) Address: (1) Universal; Archiepiscopis, episcopis, abbatibus, comitibus, baronibus, justiciis, vicecomitibus, ministris, et omnibus fidelibus suis francis et anglis; or (2) particular.

(e) Salutation: Salutem.

II. The Text:

(f) Notification: Sciatis.

(h) Disposition: Me dedisse et concessisse, or reddidisse et per hanc cartam confirmasse N. . . ., etc.; details of grant; tenendam sibi et heredibus suis de me et heredibus meis. . . .

English Royal Charter after 1189

(i.) Early Form: Richard I. and John.

In this form the Address still varies: Richard added bailliuis and sometimes senescallis et prepositis. In the Disposition the King speaks in the plural number (nos, noster). The phraseology developes as law becomes more intricate. The Charter was used for conveying land or confirming previous grants, or granting privileges and immunities.

I. The Protocol:

(c) Superscription: N. and title at length.

(d) Address: (1) General: Archiepiscopis, episcopis, abbatibus, comitibus, baronibus, justiciariis, vicecomitibus, et omnibus bailliuis, ministris, et fidelibus suis.

(e) Salutation: Salutem.

II. The Text:

(f) Notification: Sciatis . . . or Nouerit universitas vestra. . . .

(h) Disposition: nos dedisse et concessisse et presenti carta confirmasse dilecto et fideli nostro N. . . . details of grant . . . tenenda de nobis . . . per seruicium . . . pro omni seruicio. . . .

(i) Injunction: Quare volumus et firmiter precipimus quod ille . . . terras . . . habeant et teneant de nobis . . . bene et in pace . . in bosco et plano. . . .

III. The Ratification:

(p) Attestation: Testibus . . . or Hiis Testibus . . .

(r) Completion: Data per manum N. cancellarii nostri.

(o) Date of time: day of month and regnal year.

(n) Date of place: Apud . . .

(s) The King's Great Seal on silk strings. The Seal was of brown or green wax. On the Seal itself (or obverse) was an image of the King on his throne: on the Counter-seal (or reverse) the King on horseback facing to the right. The inscription ran round the edges of both Seal and Counter-seal. The type of Royal Seal has remained the same until the present time.

(ii.) Settled Form.

Until the reign of Richard I. there was no sharp diplomatic difference between a Royal Charter making a grant and another renewing or "confirming" a grant already made (the word confirmare is ambiguous). But from the beginning of the thirteenth century Royal Charters may be divided into two classes: (a) Original Grants; and (b) Charters of Confirmation.[1]

(ii.) Settled Form: (a) Original Grants.

(a) The Crown issued original grants by Royal Charter of lands, tenements, etc., and of liberties, privileges, immunities, and exemptions to private persons and to corporate bodies such as towns and monasteries.

I. The Protocol:

(c) Superscription: N. and title at length.

(n) Date of place: Apud . . .

(o) Date of time: day of month and regnal year.

(s) Seal: the King's Great Seal on silk strings.

(ii.) Settled Form: (b) Charters of Confirmation.

(b) Charters of Confirmation were rendered necessary by the loss or destruction of original grants, by the accession of a new King, or even by the King's need of ready money. A Charter of Confirmation recites the substance but not necessarily the terms or details of a former grant, to which it may or may not make additions. After 1227, when the nonage of Henry III. came to an end, Charters of Confirmation were generally in the form of an Inspeximus. The legal formulas for an Inspeximus by Royal Charter or by Letters Patent were determined by Act of Parliament, 1285.

(1) Confirmation by Inspeximus.

I. The Protocol as for an Original Grant.

II. The Text :

(g) Preamble: Inspeximus cartam quam dilectus et fidelis noster N. . . . fecit M . . . in hec verba . . . the inspected charter follows at length. . . .

(h) Disposition: Nos autem donationem concessionem . . . predictas ratas habentes et gratas eas pro nobis et heredibus nostris quantum in nobis est predicto M. concedimus et confirmamus sicut carta predicta rationabiliter testatur.

III. The Ratification as for an Original Grant.

(2) Confirmation by Exemplification.

This was nothing more than a certified copy under the Great Seal, which was enrolled in the Chancery. The Preamble is the same as that of an Inspeximus, but the Disposition runs Nos autem . . . duximus exemplificandum.

(3) Confirmation by Constat.

This was used for similar purposes, but confirmed the tenor of a Record, such as an extract from Domesday Book, or a Royal Charter.

(4) Confirmation by Innotescimus.

This was a certificate recording a deed, reciting the tenor of lost deeds, or even simply recording a properly authenticated fact—e.g., of parentage.

Letters Patent

Letters Patent,[1] enrolled certainly since 1201, were employed for the public business of the realm. Their effect might be as great as that of the Royal Charter (which they gradually ousted), or as temporary as a request for a loan. Any matter relating to the Crown and the subject which had any need of publicity might apparently be dealt with by Letters Patent. They were issued open, witnessed by the King alone, and bore no Chancery date.

I. The Protocol :

(c) Superscription: N. and title at length.

(d) Address: (1) General: Omnibus ad quos presentes litere pervenerint; (2) particular—e.g., Baronibus suis de Scaccario.

(e) Salutation: Salutem.

II. The Text :

(f) Notification: Sciatis . . . noveritis . . . inspeximus . . . etc.; or a statement relating to the business of the letter.

(i) Injunction: Et ideo uobis omnibus et singulis mandamus firmiter iniungentes . . . or as required by the occasion.

III. The Ratification :

(p) Attestation: (1) In cuius rei testimonium has literas nostras fieri fecimus patentes; (2) Teste me ipso.

Letters Close

Letters Close,[1] enrolled certainly since 1204, were issued, as the name implies, closed up and not open. They were addressed to individuals and dealt with matters touching the Crown and the Government which did not require the publicity accorded by Letters Patent. Particular affairs affecting the royal prerogative, the revenue, the judicature, the maintenance of order, etc. throughout the kingdom were dealt with by Letters Close. They may be distinguished from Letters Patent by the absence of the clause in the Attestation notifying patency.
